Assistant Professor: News and Media Management at University of Miami

University of Miami School of Communication
Department of Journalism and Media Management
Assistant Professor, News and Media Management

The Department of Journalism and Media Management at the University of Miami is seeking a tenure-track professor at the assistant or associate level in the area of television and digital news production, operations and management. This position is to begin in Fall 2015. Applicants must have a Ph.D., or provide evidence they will have completed all requirements for the degree by August 2015.

An active research agenda is required. Areas of particular interest include social, mobile and digital media and their effects on newsgathering practices and news business models. The Department welcomes a focus on international as well national research and is open to a variety of methodological approaches.

Applicants must be able to teach undergraduate courses in one or more of the following subject areas: newsroom management, television operations, the business of modern journalism, or digital and mobile media. At the graduate level, the successful candidate may also teach communication theory, research methods, or subjects related to his or her area of expertise, and will be expected to mentor graduate students and serve on dissertation and thesis committees.

The University of Miami is a vibrant, multicultural campus located in an international city with abundant opportunities to research the dynamics of journalism in a global information society. The successful candidate will join a faculty that enthusiastically seeks to be central to that conversation.

Review of applications will begin in September 2014 and continue until the position is filled. To apply, send a cover letter outlining your research agenda and teaching interests, curriculum vita, and at least three references to:
