Student’s Guide to Marketing, Advertising, and Public Relations

Lessons from the Arthur W. Page Center for Ethics and Integrity in Public Communication

Rationale and Overview
Building and maintaining a good reputation enables organizations to secure sustainability. Communication is one of the most critical reputation-building activities for organizations. Thus, it is important to understand the definition and function of each different communication activity. This lesson is designed to help students explore the differences between and similarities among marketing, advertising and public relations activities.

Module Instructions
Use the websites provided under the Key Concepts section to define several terms. Watch the video clips from public relations practitioners and then answer the questions based on those clips. Finally, read Chapter 2 by Harris and then answer the remaining questions.

Learning Objectives
This lesson is designed to help you understand the different functions and goals of marketing, advertising and public relations.

Key Concepts
Use the following websites to define marketing, advertising, and public relations and understand their relationship:

- Public Relations Society of America’s (PRSA) official statement on public relations
- American Marketing Association’s official statement on marketing
- Online reading materials provided by Professor Emeritus Michael Turney

Module Activity: Watch Video Clips
The video clips are portions of interviews with public relations practitioners related to the issues of marketing, advertising, and public relations. These video clips are available at the website for the Arthur W. Page Center for Integrity in Public Communication. First, please visit the Page
Center website, and go to Oral History Collection. Click on Ethics in Public Relations under the Finding Indexes heading. With this index, you can easily access material within and across interviews by topic, issue or specific question. Among the various topics, please click on Marketing / Advertising / Branding, and then you can access video clips of interviews with:

Module Activity: Answer Video Clip Questions

After watching the video clips, please answer the following questions. These questions are designed to encourage critical thinking on marketing, public relations, and advertising.

1. The terms public relations, communications, marketing, and advertising have become muddled. Advertising and public relations are especially commonly confused as being one-and-the-same even though they are not. What are the differences between advertising and public relations?

2. Public relations includes elements of both business and marketing. Even though these interdisciplinary characteristics sometimes make definitions of public relations ambiguous, public relations has unique characteristics, strengths and functions. What are those unique characteristics, strengths and functions?

3. Advertising, marketing and public relations agencies may provide a combination of services in a “one-stop-shop” format. What do you think about this phenomenon? Do you think providing total service is effective -- or should service be specialized?
Module Activity: Reading and Additional Questions

Because many products or services are similar, it is necessary to differentiate organizations and their products through strategic integrated marketing communication. Harris (1997) suggested that we integrate communication activities such as advertising, public relations and sales promotion in a strategic way. Please follow the link and read Chapter 2 (pages 8 and 9) titled “How Marketing Public Relations Adds Value to Integrated Marketing Communications Programs.” After reading the article, please answer the following questions.

4. In the video clips from the interviews on the Page Center website, please identify successful cases of integration of diverse communication efforts. Then explain how organizations integrated them strategically, based on the article.

5. Please follow the advertising case study found at this link to read how Clorox used Facebook to build awareness of its Green Works cleaners. Explain how Clorox strategically integrated different campaigns to build brand awareness.
