

Hayes Gardner dissects the unique system in which the youth of Kentucky face on the high school level. Kentucky is one of the only states in the country in which a majority of its high school sports only has one class for a championship.

For example, most states have a basketball championship for each class (Class 2A, 3A, etc.), but sports like football and basketball in Kentucky only have one winner.

Hayes dives into why that is and how coaches around the area feel about the topic. Some see it as unfair to smaller schools with lesser resources while others think it's the only true way to have a winner.
