

I'm pursuing a summer internship with a publishing company or at least somewhere where I can work in an editorial position. I've always wanted to try book editing, and I only have news editing experience now. I hope to learn more about the publishing world and work on my copy-editing skills. I'm aiming for an internship within a large publishing company, but I am also OK with working somewhere smaller just to get my foot in the door. I can work either remotely or on-site, and as long as I get to edit, I'll be happy with anything.
